Caitlin Kinsley's nightmares have become a reality and she thinks she is going mad.
She's not.

Aidan Sears can't shake the feeling that he knows her from somewhere; that he's met her before.
He has.

Hayley Selwyn believes Caitlin might find the answers to all her questions in some of the witchcraft books she's been reading.

She's right.

Caitlin Kinsley ("Cait") is the new girl in town. She and her family moved to the city when her father took on a lower paying job so he could be home more often to take care of his wife.

Cait's mother's nightmares have become a reality; and the combination of drugs and booze to alleviate them, sadly leads to a tragic end.

But Cait feels she might be in the same boat. Is she losing her own mind as well?

Seth Hawthan offered a trusting ear to Cait straight after she started at her new school. But his intentions are soon made clear; and they are not what Cait--or any girl--would ever want from a boy.

But Aidan Sears walks in just in time--before Seth gets his way.

And Aidan seems to have a tender history in this area; seeing what Seth planned on doing only leads to a fight like no other.

But Aidan loses ... badly, distracted by Cait's gaze and the unshakeable feeling that he has just had a conversation with her in his mind.

Where does he know her from?

Enter Hayley Selwyn, the closest friend Cait has ever had--a red-head with an outlandish sense of fashion.

Hayley likes reading about witches and Irish Mythology.

That's right: Witches and Irish Mythology ... and the singing banshees.

And we've only just gotten started ...
