Sadie Phillips is a bright but naïve eighteen-year-old when she first meets Rhys O'Connell. Devastatingly handsome and ten years her senior, Sadie is instantly smitten. But her first love affair is as brief as it is passionate and ends painfully when she learns the truth about Rhys's life – a life that doesn't include her. In the aftermath Sadie makes a series of rash decisions as she tries to move past the heartbreak.

Twelve years later, Sadie is now a woman and living with the consequences of those decisions. When her life reaches crisis point, Sadie moves to a small seaside village in Devon where she hopes to find some peace and a new start. But shortly after her arrival she is shocked to discover that Rhys is renting a cottage in the same village – searching for an escape from his own life.

Sadie's world is once again thrown into turmoil as she deals with the unexpected reunion. Can she forgive Rhys for the devastation he brought to her life? And will she be able to capture his heart now they have found each other in a different time and place . . .
